OUR REVIEWERS

Bob Wyatt, MBE, TD, National Service and short service commission in REME, 1952-60. Commanded a Royal Military Police Company, TA, (brevet Lieutenant Colonel). Recently retired as Transport Manager with the Automobile Association. Hasn't stopped collecting military books since 1944—and has a house full to prove it. Current Mayor of Wokingham.

Bob Butcher, a retired police officer, has been fascinated by the Great War since childhood. During WW2 served in the Royal Fusiliers and then the Parachute Regiment. 'Gunner' has been retired for some years and a bookworm for as long as he can remember. Prefers not to be identified. Believes a review should tell the potential buyer something about the book, the subject and its treatment, its reliability, and whether it is worth the price.

Colin McIntyre is a freelance journalist who formerly worked for the BBC. He has had several books published, the latest Monuments of War—How to Read a War Memorial being reviewed in ST/30. He is the WFA's Press and Publicity Officer.

Compliments by Sir John Keegan in the Times Literary Supplement 12 April 2002

The Great War - as it once was and is now increasingly called again - refuses to recede into the past. Not only does the enormous literature of the war continue to grow, the war has taken a grip on the public imagination.

*What I believe to be the most successful popular history organization in Britain, the Western Front Association, now has active branches in most English counties. Its members not only make frequent visits, which increasingly resemble religious pilgrimages, to the battlefields of France and Flanders. They also convene serious historical conferences and publish one of the best non-academic historical journals, Stand To!, which makes original and important contributions to our knowledge of the First World War.*

The Association, apparently fissiparously, has spread to the United States, where there are several branches, to the Republic of Ireland, and promises to take root in the old Commonwealth.

Speakers invited to address branch meetings should be on their mettle. The members display a formidably detailed knowledge of the war, ask penetrating questions and are not fobbed off with easy answers. They often show that they are better informed than the so-called expert...
